MISCELLANEOUS. FIGHT WITH AN EAGLE.

Hunter Overpowered After a Sever-

Struggle and Narrowly Escaping Death. Henry Decker and John House arrived at moth tasks, sold at the fair Lord's Valley, Pa., a few days ago, from Tren- to 409,000 roubles ($300,000). ton, N. J., expecting to remain several days to fish and hunt. At daybreak they took their guus and fishing tackle and started for Blooming Greve pond, three miles distant. While passing through the woods Decker separated from House, being called away by the barking pessing through the woods Decker separated from House, being called away by the barking of his dog, which he supposed was after a rabbit or fox. Home continued on, and soon reached the pend. He waited over an hour for his comrade's arrival, and then started back to where they had separated. He halleed repeatedly, but received no response. He then followed the tracks in the snow, and, after going nearly a mile, discovered spots of blood. His first thought was that Decker had been wounded by the accidental discharge of his gun. As he went on, the blood spots upon the snow became thicker, and near a cluster of busies there were indications that the hunter had encountered something, for the snow was trodden for a considerable distance. House called out again, and soon there came a feeble response, which was recognized as the voice of Decker. House hurried on, and as he was about to enter a deep ravine he saw the bushes move. Looking closer he saw a large gray earle perched upon Decker's breast and pooking him in the face. House approached to within shooting distance and fired, killing the eagle instantly. He hurried to where earle perched upon Decker's breast and pecking him in the fisce. House approached to within shooting distance and fired, killing the cagle instantly. He hurried to where Decker lay, and found him unconscious and bleeding. When he had gained consciousness he said that he did not see the eagle until it had descended and fastened its sharp claws into his back. Being frightened, he dropped his gun into the snow. He fought the cagle as best he could, but soon became so weak from loss of blood, and suffering such intense pain, that he fell unconscious. His body and face were terribly lacerated, and his clothing face were terribly lacerated, and his clothing was forn into shreds. He was assisted back to the valley. The eagle was the largest one ever killed in this section, measuring nearly eight feet from tip to tip of wings. A Story of De Foe's Shrewdness,

[From the Examiner.]

A too adventurous bookseller went to De Foe in great distress one day. He had published a large edition of a very dull and heavy book, called "Drelincourt on Death," with "directions how to prepare ourselves to die well," and the public, not much relishing unauthorized directions of that sort, had atubbornly refused to buy it, De Foe quieted the man's fears. Nothing short of a ghost from the grave, he said, could recommend such a book with effect, and a ghost from the grave the worthy bookseller should have. De Foe set to work and called up "The True History of the Apparition of one Mrs. Veal the next day after her Death, to one Mrs. Bargrave, at [From the Examiner.] day after her Death, to one Mrs. Bargrave, at Canterbury, the 8th of September, 1705, which Apparition recommends the perusal of 'Drelin-court's Book of Consolation against the Fears of Death.'" Nothing could possibly be more exquisitely real than the business-like, homely, earnest and common-place air of truth which was thrown into this narrative. It purported to be drawn up by "a gentleman, a justice of peace at Maidstone, Kent, a very latelligent person." The "discourse is attested by a very sober and understanding gentle

The Coldest Town.

This is Jakutsk (or Yakootsk), chief town of the province of that name in Eastern Siberia, on the left bank of the River Lena, 62° 1 north, longitude 149° 44° cast, and distant from St. Petersburg 5,951 miles. The ground remains continuously frozen to the depth of 200 feet, except in midsummer, when it thaws three feet at his surface. During fou days in August the thermometer marks 85°, but from Novamber to February it ranges from 42° to 68° below zero, and the river is solid ice for nine months out of the twelve. The entire industry of the place—population about 5,000—is comprised in candie-work, and yet it is the principal market of Eastern Scheria for traffic with the hunting tribes of the Buriats. [French Letter.]
Lady (to new girl)—I pay $40 per year. Lady (to new gir) — I pay $40 per year.

Girl—That is not enough.

Lady—But, besides, you will get present that they don't give everywhere—$10 at Easter, as new dress at Christmas and $2 every time there is a baptism in the family.

Girl—But I cannot depend on getting the last item every year for a certainty.

Lady—Whon I say a thing I mean it. It has been the custom in our family, and as long as I live it will not be abolished.
